

AIRMAN'S ROLL CALL

Week of Nov. 14, 2007 – Nov. 20, 2007

Web-based Promotion Release

This new procedure ensures timely notification for everyone.

Our Air Force has always been one of our nation's leaders in technological development, innovation and process improvement.

From fledgling beginnings flying simple aircraft across the continent and then the globe, to our space-based presence throughout the earth's stratosphere pursuing dominance and control in cyberspace, we are committed to creating and realizing a culture in which leveraging technology and improving our Airmen's lives is the norm.

As our Air Force accomplishes these exciting missions, we are also expanding our expeditionary nature to meet the global demands on our Airmen. These factors make it important for us to use innovation in every aspect of our operations to benefit all Airmen—both deployed warfighters and those in-garrison.

To this end, we are fielding a web-based, virtual enlisted promotion release system. The new process has been extensively tested and will be the new Air Force enlisted promotion release norm starting with the November 2007 chief master sergeant promotion selection announcement.

- Enlisted Airmen all over the world will get their promotion status on a specific date and time, easing their anxiety while safeguarding the integrity of the list
- The Air Force will post the promotion announcement and list directly to secure and non-secure world-wide Web sites, ensuring timely notification.
- The new program does not change the responsibility or the ability of Commanders and senior enlisted leaders to acknowledge those selected for promotion and to ensure proper recognition.
